Russia's large-scale military aggression against Ukraine, which began on 24 February 2022, has triggered a global „Zeitenwende“. Russia has not only attacked its sovereign neighbor, but has also deliberately attacked the world order based on the principles of the United Nations Charter. With Russia, there is no return to business as usual for Europeans. European security, at least in the long term, seems only possible against Russia and not in cooperation with Russia, as many had hoped in the past. European relations with Russia will of course depend on Russia's own international development. What Russia will look like after the war with Ukraine will of course also depend on the outcome of the war - which is still difficult to predict.

Relations with Russia will be just as important for Europeans in the future as they have been in the past. Therefore, it makes a lot of sense to discuss possible scenarios.

We are pleased to have Olga Oliker and András Rácz two renowned Russia experts as our guests, who will be happy to answer our questions after their presentations. We would like to thank the FES, which invites us to a coffee reception afterwards, for their renewed support.

Dr. Olga Oliker is Crisis Group's Program Director for Europe and Central Asia, and leads the organisation's research, analysis, policy prescription and advocacy in and about Russia, Europe, Türkiye, the Caucasus, and Central Asia. Oliker's own research interests center on the foreign and security policies of Russia, Ukraine, and the Central Asian and Caucasian successor states to the Soviet Union, domestic politics in these countries, U.S. policy towards the region, and nuclear weapon strategy and arms control.

Prior to joining Crisis Group, Oliker directed the Russia and Eurasia Program at the Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS) and held various research and management roles at the RAND Corporation, including as Director of the Center for Russia and Eurasia. Early in her career, she served at the U.S. Department of Defense. Oliker holds a Ph.D. in political science from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, an M.P.P. from the Harvard University Kennedy School of Government, and a B.A. from Emory University. Oliker is the author of numerous articles, monographs, and reports, with recent publications in Foreign Affairs, Survival, and other journals. She has also published commentary in print and online with The New York Times, The Hill, The Chicago Tribune, War on the Rocks, CNN, U.S. News and World Report, and The National Interest, among others.

Dr András Rácz is an associate fellow in DGAP's (German Council on Foreign Relations) Security and Defense Program. Previously, he was a senior fellow in that program. From September 2019 to December 2020, he was a senior fellow of the Robert Bosch Center for Central and Eastern Europe, Russia, and Central Asia.

Before that, Rácz was associate professor at the Pázmány Péter Catholic University in Budapest and non-resident research fellow of the Estonian Foreign Policy Institute in Tallinn. Between 2014 and 2016, he was senior research fellow of the Finnish Institute of International Affairs in Helsinki. Prior to that, Rácz worked as a senior research fellow at the former Hungarian Institute of International Affairs and a visiting researcher at the Transatlantic Academy of the German Marshall Fund in Washington, DC. He was also a fellow of the Volkswagen Foundation's program in European Foreign and Security Policy Studies (EFSPS).

Rácz earned his PhD in modern history from Budapest's Eötvös Loránd University in 2008.
